The novel opens with Aunt Polly scouting the house in search of her nephew, Tom Sawyer. She finds him in the closet, discovers that his hands are covered with jam, and prepares to give him a whipping. Tom cries out theatrically, “Look behind you!” and when Aunt Polly turns, Tom escapes over the fence. After Tom is gone, Aunt Polly reflects sadly on Tom’s mischief and how she lets him get away with too much.

Tom comes home at suppertime. He has a scratch on his face and a roll of bandages on his head and shows how his collar is still stiff from the ink he got into it. He is half-brother to the boy he has just broken up. Tom has sworn to disguise himself to go to the dance and learn all he can about his adventures. At dinner, Aunt Polly looks at Tom and observes that his collar is still stiff from the ink he got into it.

Tom goes out of the house to look out for a boy. He soon arrives and eventually chores the newcomer all the way home.

When he returns home in the evening, Tom finds Aunt Polly waiting for him. She notices his dirtied clothes and resolves to make him work the next day, a Saturday, as punishment.

On Saturday morning, Aunt Polly sends Tom out to whitewash the fence. Jim passes by, and Tom tries to get him to do some of the whitewashing in return for a “white alley,” a kind of mustard. Jim almost agrees, but Aunt Polly appears and chases him off, leaving Tom alone with his task.

Tom comes home at suppertime, looking boyish, his ears red and round like sausages, his hair all hung down in front of his face, and his collar still worn down over his throat. He sits down to supper, and Aunt Polly makes an inquiry about his adventures. During supper, Aunt Polly is satisfied. Tom has been to school that afternoon and went outside to play. He played with a kite, fell down, and drew a tear from his eye. He declared that his collie was still a kid. Tom's half-brother, Pete, has been sick and Tom has sworn the boy's soul with both hands to revenge himself on Pete. Aunt Polly is satisfied.
